THE BOLACING WEED. Civilized Men Take to Tobacco as a Level

In the opinion of about four in every five men the essential difference between man and the inferior animals is that man smokes tobacco. Occasionally a pre-cocious monkey has been taught to drink beer and smoke a pipe-Old Ton in the London zoo, for instance-bu this only emphasizes the exclusive hu-manness of smoking. The monkey is nearest kin to man and is in full progress toward the human state. As the ultra temperance lecturers affirm, "A dog wouldn't smoke the vile weed." No other animal than superior man and the anthropoid ape will smoke. Perhaps in the civilized white world one man in five is the victim of some defect that disqualifies him for smoking. The defeet may be a tendency to a canceron growth, or it may be a wife or a motherin-law. The remaining four arc in the full enjoyment of all their faculties and the right to pursue happiness through a cloud of tobacco smoke.

Lack of opportunity to smoke is with-out doubt the most afflictive evil under which a majority of men suffer. A which a majority of men suiter. A large proportion of men are employed in offices, stores and shops where rules against smoking are rigidly enforced. This is entirely proper. No superior smoker ever smokes while working. To do that is to debase the luxury and to take off the keen edge of the pleasure. It is intemperance and dissipation. The most expert wine tasters never drink to excess, but find that in moderation only does the palate retain its power to de-tect the delicate flavor. So with smoking. At night, after a few pipes or cigars have dulled the edge of appetite, it is allowable to smoke half a dozen with some violence to stimulate a jaded palate, but at other times pleasure goes with moderation. To smoke after a meal is the imperative demand of the whole system. Not to be able to do this is to incur endless disorders of the nervous system, the stomach and the entire digestive apparatus and sometimes to in-vite progressive decay of the mental faculties. There is no better preparation for a day's work for the smoker than a pipe or cigar after breakfast.—New York Advertiser.

BRASS SIGNS IN NEW YORK,

Probably Half a Million Dollars Investor

A stroll along Broadway early in the morning discloses an army of men eu-gaged in polishing the brass signs that flank the entrance of the stores, and the same sight may be noted on Sixth avenue or any of the other principal business streets. Walk down one of these thoroughfares an hour later, and the rays of the sun, reflected from thou-sands of burnished surfaces, made bright for the day by vigorous rubbing, dance about you and dazzle your eyes. In fact, commercial New York is a city of brass

"Well," he replied, "a door sign of brass costs from $25 to $150, according to its size, lettering and border designs

Of course you can get small office signs for less money, but I am speaking of those used by merchants, bankers and that class of people. Take some large stores, and you will notice they are lit-erally bordered with brass signs at the entrances and long signs beneath the big Horsepower of the World's Engines.

A steam "horsepower" is equivalent to the actual strength of three horses of the average weight and size, and each horse represents the strength of seven men of the average weight of 154 pounds. The total horsepower of the en-gines of the world (not including loconotives, of which there are 105,000, with a total horsepower of 3,000,000) is 46,-000,000, which represents all the force that could be exerted by 1,000,000,000 men, or more than twice the total working population of the entire globe. Four-fifths of the power machines now in ac-tive service have been made during the past 25 years. This country has the highest amount of horsepower, 7,500,-000; England comes second, with 7,000,-000; Germany third, 4,500,000, only

"There is a species of the bird known as the woodpecker in the far west that has an unusual amount of reasoning faculty," said Dr. Theodore Mayfield. "It is much tamer than the species of that bird found farther east and frequents the towns rather than the woods. They make holes along the caves of the dwellings, and in these holes they place acorns, not for the purpose of eating them, as I am told that the birds do not cat acorns at all, but for the purpose of devouring the grubs that germinate in the acorns. During a trip to the coast I was interested in watching this birds and was told by a number of people about the characteristics of which I speak. This indicates a continuous train of thought, looking forward to the time of the creation of the worm and its desirability as food."

A recent letter from New Zealand says:

"I have traveled in many countries, but in no other land have I seen the courtesy and unobtrusive chivairy habitually exhibtied to women, whether young or old, by New Zealand young men of every condition and rank. The status of a New Zealand women is considerably higher than that of her sister in Australia or England,
